COORG—A District of Southern India under the jurisdiction of the Chief Commissioner of Mysore.

The Coorg country is formed by the summits and eastern declivities of the Western Ghats, which separate it on the south and west from the woody tracts of North Malabar (Wynad) and South Canara (Tulu); in the north and east it merges into the table-land of Mysore with the only partially natural boundary of the rivers Kumārakūri, Hemāvati, and Kāvēri. Its greatest length from north to south, from the river Hemāvati to the Brahmagiris, extends over sixty, and its greatest width from west to east, from Sāmpaji to Fraserpet, about forty English miles. Geographically speaking, the whole country lies between N. Lat. 11° 53' and 12° 50', and E. Long. 75° 25' and 76° 14'. Before the annexation of Coorg by the English, the limits of this little kingdom extended over a larger tract, and included the two talooks of Canara, Amrasnlya and Puttur, comprising an area of about 580 square miles, which, at the request of the inhabitants, were separated from Coorg, and added to the Collectorate of South Canara. In the absence of an accurate survey, the area of Coorg has been estimated at 2,000 square miles. Population, according to the census taken on the 14th November 1875, is 1,68,312 inhabitants.
